AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

That great mistakes have been made by those who organized these colleges there is no doubt; but at the same time their is a general misapprehension on the part of the critics. The truth is, not a single agricultural college, such as was contemplated by Congress, has yet been established. One college, for instance, haverect a greenhouse at the expense of $10,000, while it had not a barn suited to shelter the work animals of the farm. This sketch of my Hostrions relicoed man copied from the Texas from Age : is copied from the Texas Iron Age:
This gentleman, who, a few years age, was comparatively unknown, has, within the past few years, and thought a position where he countrels and threats the aperations of more unites at railroad than either Vanderbill or say of his great competitors, and that, two, before the country realized the magnitude of his schemes as the greatness of his operations. To him we owe the prospective scenific which the building and compistion of the Texas Pacific railway Thomas Alexander Scott was been in Laufon, Frenkin county, Pennsylvania, on the twenty-righth of December, 1821, and 18 25 Is now to the forcy-nightly year of his age.
